Hayes assists Wounded Warrior Project

Hometown veteran, Bryan Hayes, combines love of military, music and fitness to raise awareness and funds for Wounded Warrior Project.

Bryan M Hayes (1LT, U.S. Army National Guard) served seven years, including a tour in Iraq in 2010. He was assigned to Tennessee's 278th Armored Cavalry Regiment.

In 2014, Bryan resigned his commission to pursue a full-time career as a producer, engineer and touring songwriter. Upon leaving the Army, Hayes "felt a void and wanted to find a way to continue to serve." This desire to remain connected to the military spawned the creation of the Team I Wanna Run fundraising initiative that raises money and awareness for the Wounded Warrior Project (WWP). According to Hayes, "We do this by creating, supporting, and participating in various entertainment and fitness events throughout the country. These events are designed to educate, inspire, and strengthen communities, in addition to generating donations for WWP."

The Wounded Warrior Project, as defined by their website, serves veterans and active military who incurred service-connected physical or mental injuries or illness on or after September 11, 2001 as well as their families. The non-profit organization currently assists nearly 90,000 individuals free of charge; their motto: "There are no dues here - those were paid on the battlefield."

Bryan's patriotism and adoration for his country are evident in the music he writes. His latest album, Farther Down the Line, gathered much inspiration from his tour in Mosul, Iraq. The album's first single and namesake of his charity organization, I Wanna Run, is a personal reflection of his time spent in combat. One hundred percent of all digital download sales are being donated to Wounded Warrior Project.
